that took us to the West Coast and the Lions International Tuesday week much wiser and were two weeks previously when

As we said last week, we had never been to the West Coast, and had missed many scenic and interesting sights which many of you have visited in years past.

Guess we have been a sort of stick-in-the-mud in not having visited the West. Although we had been in probably half the states of the union, most of these have been in the central part of the country, extending all the way to the Canadian border.

WITH THE WIFE and the northwestward out through Lubbock, Clovis and Albuquerque, spending our first night at the latter city, which is New Mexico's largest. Modern Albuquerque, with more than 100,000 population, is a far cry from the 10,000 peopled city we visited there some 30 years ago. Clean and well laid out, it is truly a gem in a semi-arid area of the country.

At about nightfall we ran into our only rain at Santa Rosa, New Mexico, on the entire trip. And, sheets for a few minutes. Out north of that city the freshet really filled the gullies in the heading for the feed trough.

AFTER TRAVERSING the Northwestern corner of New Mexico, which probably presented more contrasts in territory than any other day's drive, we reached Flagstaff, Arizona, for our second night stop.

Except in New Mexico, where we stayed in tourist courts on the trip out and return, tourist courts cost from $8 to $25 per night. We didn't stay in any of the latter priced places!

In fact, except for the great irrigated sections of the far west, seldom did we find crops that looked as in the Hamlin region.

This day's drive carried us across vast pasture land sections that generally looked prosperous. However, here, as in most of our trip, there were evidences of a general lack of moisture for pastures and crops.

Our first major scenic spot to be visited on the trip was the Petrified Forest.

grew to immense size-up to 10 district. feet in circumference and more than 100 feet tall, were later buried in a saline sea for ages. The guides explained that the wood was turned into stone by progressive steps of minerals and soil formations. Later, they said, rosions placed the forest on small knolls. Most of the trees were formed into agate and other red looking stone beautiful and intriguing, especially when the stone was polished.

Guides explained that millions of tons of the petrified trees were removed for their marble before the forest was protected by federal laws and converted into a national park.

AFTER VISITING the Petrifled Forest we drove into Flagstaff, Arizona, for our second might's stop. This was to be the starting point for our trip the third day to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River watered valley between two huge ranges of mountains, was a busy lumbering, mining and railroad town. The main line of the Santa Fa runs through there, and we believe we encountered the Union Pacific Railroad here, too.

Flagstaff presented our first Western country. As we have courts, hotels and cafes have to make a living off the tourists in about four months-we returned home thoroughly convinced of this ed by the Stamford officer Sunday

We encountered our first major pine trees near Flagstaff as we headed north some 60 miles to cover the car. visit the Grand Canyon. We just ! couldn't resist the urge to pick up some pine cones!

SALESMANSHIP MIGHT HELP FARM SURPLUSES

As a class, the farmer and rancher have been the victims of inflationary trends in recent years all out of proportion to those experienced by most businesses and wage earners. Generally prices for farm and ranch products are higher now than they have been for many years-but the things the producer must buy are still higher. The Herald makes no pretense of having a solution for this unbalanced economy, but reads with interest articles in several farm magazines discussing these problems. A recent issue of The Farm Journal has an interesting article along this line that deserves reproduction here, we believe:

Selling costs money. Sometimes it costs quite a bit of money. Yet every manufacturer and every merchandiser, if successful, employs salesmen and buys advertising. They run schools to train salesmen. They study consumers to learn about buying habits. They hunt new markets and new buyers. They pay well for efficient selling.

Why? Because good salesmanship moves Goods, increases their profits. Can better selling move more farm products at better prices? Farmers have given the answer to that time and again. Thousands with products suited No nearby consumers have made a good living [14] lling person-to-person. California fruit growers, Ohio hog feeders, New York grape growers have proved that they get more margin by spending money to increase sales. And the leadership of these groups has proved that farmers have salesmanship talent right in their own ranks if we'll but use it.

Organized promotion of commodities is the key - organization with funds. Individual farmers can be salesmen, too, in some communities and to some degree, but only organized selling will accomplish great results.

Farmers have too long depended upon dealers and processors to do most of the selling, market research and education. Some have done it well, though naturally they are more concerned about their own margins than about profits for producers.

Government can't do an adequate selling job and shouldn't be in the business of selling farm commodities. It even has trouble giving them away, and taxpayers can't be expected to let that go on indefinitely.

We believe there are markets in this country and in this world for all the quality products that American farmers have to offer.

And we suspect that farmers are going to organize and pay for—with voluntary contributions—a great deal more selling than they have in the past.

Should Wives Work?

Lady, if you are considering joniing other phousewives who are streaming back to work these days, here are some problems you will have to think about, according to the editors of Changing Times, the Kiplinger magazine.

It the main purpose is to add to the family coffers, a wife must have a job that will pay thet return that will make the job financially worthwhile. If she files a joint income tax return, she pays at her husband's top rate. If he is in, say, the 26 per cent bracket, roughly 26 cents of every dollar she earns will go to taxes. And so, the more her husband earns, the more she pays for the privilege of work-

One wife, whom the editors cite as typical, took a job that paid $250 a month. After all expenses for clothes, baby sitter, lunches, transportation and taxes had been taken out she discovered that she had $91 a month left to contribute to the family income. Even at that, she continues to work because the $91 a month makes it possible for her and her $461-a-month husband to stay out of debt.

She will have personal and family prob to cope with, too. An outside job may free her from routine household tasks, but it will not rid her of the responsibility of managing her home. Is she up to it physically as well as emotionally? Will the youngsters be okay? Whether or not a wife is depriving her child by working depends on the kind of person she is and the kind of arrangements she makes for his care

Finally, will her husband go along with the idea whole-heartedly? Will he pitch in with the house work if he has to? Does he agree that the kids will be in good hands? Remember, that the decision about a wife taking a job is a family one.

Help Youngsters Learn

Whether your young child is exceptionally bright or not, here are some ways to help him learn: Let him talk as much as he likes. And listen. Speak correctly to him. Answer his questions patiently-even when they get on your nerves.

Read to him. When he grows restless, though, let him go. Stick to good books.

Encourage him to reason, to plan ahead, to follow instructions. But don't press him to learn. And don't teach him to read—that's a specialist's job.

Have faith in him. If he's like other kids, fine. If he's different, that's fine, too. Let him know that he's yours and he's okay.

Want to Win a Bet?

Citizens Public Expenditure Survey suggests that "if you want to win a bet, bet your neighbor he can't tell you how much taxes he pays in a year." The odds are overwhelming that he can't-because of the vast number of hidden, indirect and so-called 'painless' taxes that exist.

according to a recent authoritative computation. If you make $67.30 a week, you pay $1,043 a year in taxes. If you make $86.54 a week, you pay 1.425 a year. And if you've children, Robbie and Mary, of got a job paying $7,500 a year, the tax collectors will get $2,637 of it-more than onethird.

The survey states: "At $66.54 a week, you work more hours to pay your taxes than or food and clothing combined!" Tell that to those who still say that taxation is a serious problem only to the rich!

Editorial of the Week

GOVERNMENT COSTS MORE

Few Americans will be left unaware that the budget sent to Congress recently by President Eisenhower tops all peace time records. The Democrate will make sure that the fact gets well aired. And they will probably call attention to the difference between the new $71,800,010,000 expenditure planned for the year beginning July 1 and the $60,000,000,000 budget Republicans were talking about in

They will also hardly fait to point out that non-military expenses have been rising steadily. In the last full Trum in year they were $18,700,000,000 against $20,500,000,000 for next year. But actually the Republican record is good. The Eisenhower administration has been sincers and energetic in seeking economies. It has made savings, but inflation and the popular demand for more services have outmatched them.

It has been in the supposedly flexible nonmilitary expenditures that most of the gains (or losses) have occurred because they flexed uled Friday night at the Pied Pipthe wrong w.y. Higher costs for wages, in- er stadium diamond. terest and materials have boosted expenses repeatedly.

Most citizenh will be grateful that revenues are expected to be grat enough to provide a surplus and knock near'y $2,000,000,000 off the national debt. The situation holds no promise of a tax cut, and indeed economists generally hold a tax cut would be inflationary-something better saved to counteract any possible slumping of the business boom.—The Christian Science Monitor.

may not realize that non-taxable bonds are around their lowest prices for a long number of years. As an illustration, state of Massachusetts highly rated bonds carrying the full faith and credit of the state, free of all federal and state taxes, which sold at par in 1950 can now be bought around 65 cents. This is the lowest price in their history.

This decline is due to the constantly increasing interest rates of the past several years. There is no other logical reason. While the stock market has been climbing since 1949 (when the Dow-Jones industrial average was around 165, in contrast to today's level of around 500), bonds have been declining. Yet the bond market is just as susceptible to the law of action and reaction as the stock market. When stocks are clearly in a bear movement and money rates decline, bonds will again go up in price. Therefore, non-taxable bonds may be in the position today that the blue chips were eight years ago when they were selling at a third of their present prices.

Certain banks and other institutions which are large bond buyers state that there are reasons other than increased interest rates why municipal bonds are selling ings institutions have been selling the bonds of large cities, especially industrial cities which could be targets for bombing. At the same time, these institutions have found it very difficult to sell the unlisted bonds of small they are perfectly safe and yield around four per cent income tax and son of Dallas were here this free.

I believe turnpike bonds should be a logical exception to the above situation. They have both securters and Mrs. Lott Shell and ity and marketability. The conservative financial institutions say they do not like them because they are revenue bonds, dependent Yet, every corporation bond is a revenue bond, depending upon earnings. The non-taxable feature of turnpike bonds, however, far exceeds the slight risk of declining earnings. Of all the turnpike bonds only one issue. secured by the West Virginia turnpike, which "starts nowhere and ends nowhere," has failed to make good. I admit that with rationing of gasoline in the event of World War III turnpikes would temporarily be in trouble; but so would almost everything else. No bombing, however, could materially damage a modern turnpike. Recently the Boston & Maine Railroad cancelled all its commut er business because of a strike by the maintenance men. It would take a strike of several months' duration by turnpike maintenance men before their services would be missed. Prac tically the only necessary employees of a turnpike authority are those who collect the tolls. And I cannot magine these men striking. Turnpikes are, therefore, less liable than most investments to suffer from labor troubles.

One of today's fastest growing industries is the automobile industry, and our turnpikes must prosper along with it. Not only are new cars put out by the millions each year, but boys in a very old Ford must pay the same toll as those riding in new Cadil-

"The force of impact is increased much more rapidly than speed. If you double your speed, you hit our times as hard.

Guess we have been a sort of stick-in-the-mud in not having visited the West. Although we had been in probably half the states of the union, most of these have been in the central part of the country, extending all the way to the Canadian border.

WITH THE WIFE and the eldest of three grandsons bock, Clovis and Albuquerque, spending our first night at the latter city, which is New Mexico's largest. Modern Albuquerque, with more than 100,000 population, is a far cry from the 10,000 30 years ago, Clean and well laid out, it is truly a gem in a semi-arid area of the country.

At about nightfall we ran into our only rain at Santa Rosa, New Mexico, on the entire trip. And, believe you me, the rain came in north of that city the freshet really filled the gullies in the flooding waters headed for the Pecos River like hungry hogs heading for the feed trough,

AFTER TRAVERSING the Northwestern corner of New Mexico, which probably presented more contrasts in territory than any other day's drive, we reached Flagstaff, Arizona, for our second night stop.

Except in New Mexico, where we stayed in tourist courts on courts cost from $8 to $25 per night. We didn't stay in any of the latter priced places!

In fact, except for the great irrigated sections of the far west, seldom did we find crops that looked as in the Hamlin region.

This day's drive carried us across vast pasture land sections that generally looked prosperous. However, here, as in most of our trip, there were evidences of a general lack of moisture for pastures and crops

Our first major scenic spot to be visited on the trip was the

AFTER VISITING the Petrifled Forest we drove into Flagstaff, Arizona, for our second might's stop. This was to be the starting point for our trip the third day to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River.

Flagstaff, nestled in a well watered valley between two huge ranges of mountains, was a busy lumbering, mining and railroad town. The main line of the Santa Fa runs through there, and we believe we encountered the Union Pacific Railroad here, too.

been the victims of inflationary trends in recent years all out of proportion to those experienced by most businesses and wage earners. Generally prices for farm and ranch products are higher now than they have been for many years-but the things the producer must buy are still higher. The Herald makes no pretense of having a solution for this unbalanced economy, but reads with interest articles in several farm magazines discussing these problems. A recent issue of The Farm Journal has an interesting article along this line that deserves reproduction here, we believe:

Selling costs money. Sometimes it costs quite a bit of money. Yet every manufacturer and every merchandiser, if successful, employs salesmen and buys advertising. They run schools to train salesmen. They study consumers to learn about buying habits. They hunt new markets and new buyers. They pay well for efficient selling.

Why? Because good salesmanship moves Goods, increases their profits. Can better selling move more farm products at better prices? Farmers have given the answer to that time and again. Thousands with products suited to nearby consumers have made a good living welling person-to-person. California fruit grow-

Should Wives Work?

As a class, the farmer and rancher have | ers, Ohio hog feeders, New York grape grow ers have proved that they get more margin by spending money to increase sales. And the leadership of these groups has proved that farmers have salesmanship talent right in their own ranks if we'll but use it.

> Organized promotion of commodities is the key - organization with funds. Individual farmers can be salesmen, too, in some communities and to some degree, but only organ ized selling will accomplish great results.

> Farmers have too long depended upon dealers and processors to do most of the selling, market research and education. Some have done it well, though naturally they are more concerned about their own margins than about profits for producers.

Government can't do an adequate selling ob and shouldn't be in the business of selling farm commodities. It even has trouble giving them away, and tuxpayers can't be expected to let that go on indefinitely.

We believe there are markets in this country and in this world for all the quality products that American farmers have to offer.

And we suspect that farmers are going to organize and pay for-with voluntary contributions—a great deal more selling than they have in the past.

Want to Win a Bet?

Lady, if you are considering joniing other housewives who are streaming back to work these days, here are some problems you will have to think about, according to the editors of Changing Times, the Kiplinger magazine.

It the main purpose is to add to the family coffers, a wife must have a job that will pay 'at least her expenses plus her taxes and a thet return that will make the job financially worthwhile. If she files a joint income tax return, she pays at her husband's top rate. If he is in, say, the 26 per cent bracket, roughby 26 cents of every dollar she earns will go to taxes. And so, the more her husband earns, the more she pays for the privilege of work-

One wife, whom the editors cite as typical, took a job that paid $250 a month. After all expenses for clothes, baby sitter, lunches, transportation and taxes had been taken out she discovered that she had $91 a month left to contribute to the family income. Even at that, she continues to work because the $91 a month makes it possible for her and her $461-a-month husband to stay out of debt.

She will have personal and family prob to cope with, too. An outside job may free her from routine household tasks, but it will not rid her of the responsibility of managing her home. Is she up to it physically as well as emotionally? Will the youngsters be okay? Whether or not a wife is depriving her child by working depends on the kind of person she Is and the kind of arrangements she makes for

Finally, will her husband go along with the idea whole-heartedly? Will he pitch in with the house work if he has to? Does he agree that the kids will be in good hands? Remember, that the decision about a wife taking a job is a family one.

Help Youngsters Learn

Whether your young child is exceptionally bright or not, here are some ways to help him learn: Let him talk as much as he likes. And listen. Speak correctly to him. Answer his questions patiently—even when they get on your nerves.

Read to him. When he grows restless, though, let him go. Stick to good books.

Encourage him to reason, to plan ahead, to follow instructions. But don't press him to learn. And don't teach him to read—that's a specialist's job.

Have faith in him. If he's like other kids, fine. If he's different, that's fine, too. Let him know that he's yours and he's okay.

Citizens Public Expenditure Survey suggests that "if you want to win a bet, bet your neighbor he can't tell you how much taxes he pays in a year." The odds are overwhelming that he can't-because of the vast number of hidden, indirect and sc-called 'painless' taxes that exist.

Here's the way the tax bill works out, according to a recent authoritative computation. If you make $67.30 a week, you pay $1,043 a year in taxes. If you make $86.54 a week, you pay 1.425 a year. And if you've got a job paying $7,500 a year, the tax collectors will get $2,637 of it-more than one-

The survey states: "At $86.54 a week, you work more hours to pay your taxes than ior food and clothing combined!" Tell that to those who still say that taxation is a serious problem only to the rich!

Editorial of the Week

GOVERNMENT COSTS MORE

Few Americans will be left unaware that the budget sent to Congress recently by President Eisenhower tops all peace time records. The Democrate will make sure that the fact gets well aired. And they will probably call attention to the difference between the new $71,800,0.10,000 expenditure planned for the year beginning July 1 and the $60,000,000,000 budget Republicans were talking about in

They will also hardly fail to point out that non-military expenses have been rising steadily. In the last full Trum in year they were $18,700,000,000 ragainst $20,500,000,000 for next year. But actually the Republican record is good. The Eisenhower administration has been sincers and energetic in seeking economies. It has made savings, but inflation and the popular demand for more services have outmatched them.

It has been in the supposedly flexible nonmilitary expenditures that most of the gains (or losses) have occurred because they flexed | uled Friday night at the Pied Pipthe wrong w.y. Higher costs for wages, interest and materials have boosted expenses repeatediv.

Most citizenh will be grateful that revenues are expected to be grattenough to provide a surplus and knock near'y $2,000,000,000 off the national debt. The situation holds no promise of a tax cut, and indeed economists generally hold a tax cut would be inflationary—something better saved to counteract any possible slumping of the business boom.—The Christian Science Monitor.

Casual |readers of this column may not realize that non-taxable bonds are around their lowest prices for a long number of years As an illustration, state of Massachusetts highly rated bonds carrying the full faith and credit of the state, free of all federal and state taxes, which sold at par in 1950 can now be bought around 65 cents. This is the lowest price in their history.

This decline is due to the constantly increasing interest rates of the past several years. There is no other logical reason. While the stock market has been climbing since 1949 (when the Dow-Jones industrial average was around 165, in contrast to today's level of around 500), bonds have been declining. Yet the bond market is just as susceptible to the law of action and reaction as the stock market. When stocks are clearly in a bear movement and money rates decline, bonds will again go up in price. Therefore, non-taxable bonds may be in the position today that the blue chips were eight years ago when they were selling at a third of
